A RUSSIAN VERSION.

CONFESSION OF DEFEAT.

APPALLING LOSSES OF MEN.

FIERCE JAPANESE ATTACKS.

LONDON, May 4.

General Saussehltz, of the Russian army, reports that the 12th and 22nd Regiments, with the second and third batteries of the 6th Brigade of Artillery, were engaged at Fushenchi on Sunday.

The battle began with a heavy cannonade upon the Russian right flank, from the Wujiu islands, and the field batteries on the left.

After a full, firing, directed with extraordinary violence upon the left flank and the main position at Turentchen and Potentzia, assisted bodies of Japanese to cross the Ai-ho, and the situation of the defenders became most difficult, especially at Potentzia, which was bombarded from the front and from both flanks.

TERRIFIC FIGHTING.

Thirty Japanese guns were pitted against one battery at Potentzia, and the latter was silenced.

A Japanese mountain battery then fired upon the infantry, itself sustaining a few losses, until the withdrawal, the Russian infantry being compelled to take a fresh position.

Despite the Russian fire the Japanese made continued attacks. Their bodies lay in heaps at the foot of the river.

A DOUBLE ATTACK.

Simultaneously with the attack on Potentzia another was made on the left flank, compelling the abandonment of the Russian trenches at Turentchen.

Reserves trenches were reinforced the first line, enabling it for a long time to maintain its position.

Finally all the supports were brought to the firing line, but owing to the distance from the main reserves it was impossible to reach the advanced front in time.

RUSSIAN DRIVEN BACK.

The Russians retired from their principal position in the rear of Turentchen, followed by the concentrated fire of the Japanese, which was directed at the head of the hill in face of the Russian batteries, which were worked during the retreat.

The Japanese dug fresh trenches, opened a heavy artillery fire on the new Russian position, and began to turn the Russian left flank towards Telingou.

THE SECOND STAND.

Two battalions of the 11th Regiment, with a battery belonging to the reserve, took a fresh position at Lishukou, enabling the advanced line which had suffered heavily and the wounded to retire.

When the flanks of the 11th Regiment were turned, the Russians several times defied the bayonet, but the Japanese delivered a hand to hand conflict and recoiled.

A chaplain bearing a red cross, led, and was twice struck with bullets.

THE FINAL DEFEAT.

By threatening bayonet charges the regiment was at length able to retire, and the arrival of a battalion of the 10th Regiment enabled all to beat a retreat.

The losses of the 11th and 12th Regiments are unknown, but they are very great.

GREAT RUSSIAN LOSSES.

One colonel and two lieutenant-colonels of the 11th Regiment were killed. The 12th Regiment lost nine company commanders, killed or wounded. The second and third batteries of the 6th Brigade abandoned their guns when they had lost the greater number of their men and horses. They first, however, rendered the guns useless.

For the same reason six guns of the third battery and eight other guns were disabled and abandoned.

Up to the present 800 wounded, including 14 officers, have been brought to Fushenchi hospital. Their eventual transport elsewhere is assured.

The transport of the wounded with Chinese bearers is very difficult. Most of them arrived at the fort assisted by comrades within the day of the battle.

The troops have retained their morale, and are ready for fresh engagements.

THREE THOUSAND JAPANESE KILLED.

The Japanese losses at the passage of the Ai-ho (General Saussehltz further reports) were very heavy. The men engaged in the battle estimate that at least 3000 or 4000 Japanese were killed, chiefly at Turentchen, and during the conflict with the 11th Regiment.

A RUSSIAN STORY.

PHENOMENAL HEROISM.

LONDON, May 4.

St. Petersburg reports contain a striking episode on the Yalu.

A regiment without artillery attacked two divisions and half a division of Japanese.

The Russians, headed by a chaplain bearing a cross, fought like lions and bore down masses of the enemy, but were overwhelmed and almost annihilated.

The scene resembled shambles.

CAMPAIGN IN MANCHURIA.

SCENE IN THE COMMONS.

LONDON, May 4.

A scene occurred in the House of Commons last night.

Mr. McKenna (Liberal) suggested that a great quantity of unstripped tobacco had been imported in anticipation of the imposition of the new duty on the stripped tobacco, and he implied that the Mr. Austen Chamberlain had been duped by consulting Mr. Callaghan, a member of the Conservative Commission, who was a large holder of unstripped tobacco.

Mr. Austen Chamberlain denied that he had consulted any member of the Commission, and warmly rebuked Mr. McKenna for insinuating dishonesty without accepting the responsibility of a direct charge.

STATE CAMPAIGN.

LONDON, May 4.

There is a settled conviction in the minds of the great bulk of members that the present Parliament will not again meet in the ranks of the Oppositionists that feeling is accompanied by indignation that the Government should so trifly with the people of the country. It is said that the Government are now the slightest intention of calling Parliament together before its expiration, and that their present conduct in playing fast and loose with the country is another proof of the absurdity of their claim to be a responsible Government. Perhaps when the last session closed the Government may have intended to have another session, although there was a strong suspicion at the time that the Government were full well that it would be a session to meet the present Parliament, and the country generally. Every member of the Opposition is now waiting for the Government to call Parliament together, and every member of the Opposition is now waiting for the Government to call Parliament together.

The Government are now waiting for the Opposition
